

God's Golden Children

Captured within this book are touching stories written by parents, children, doctors, and scientists, from all over the world. How they cope with a very rare, frustrating, genetic disorder called Crigler-Najjar Syndrome (jaundice).

One girl would be a "millionaire" if she would have gotten a nickel for every time someone thought she had a contagious disease (because the whites of her eyes are yellow). Another girl goes through three liver transplants. One child's photo was in the National Geographic.

Read about having to sleep under very bright lights, for 10-12 hours every night to escape brain damage; being called nasty names because you look a little different; sleeping at a hospital for five years; or thirteen years of living in loneliness, isolation, and fear of the unknown.

It's an inspiration of love, hope, and faith in God, that He will save the lives of these otherwise normal children as the doctors do their best to make gene therapy work.
